A Dialogue on the Pros and Cons of Part-Time Jobs for Students

Ali: Hey, did you hear that our university is considering allowing students to take part-time jobs officially?

Hassan: Yes, but I'm not sure it's a good idea. Won't it distract us from our studies?

Ali: Not necessarily. A part-time job can teach responsibility and time management.

Hassan: True, but some students might struggle to balance both.

Ali: That's why they should allow only a limited number of work hours.

Hassan: I agree. But what if parents start to force their kids to work just to earn?

Ali: Then awareness is needed. No one should be forced; it should be a personal choice.

Hassan: I'd need a lot of convincing to take one. I already find my routine stressful.

Ali: But think about the experience and skills you gain. That's what persuaded me.

Hassan: Hmm... some companies even require work experience for entry-level jobs now.

Ali: Exactly! A part-time job can give you an edge after graduation.

Hassan: I see your point. But universities should provide counseling before students start working.

Ali: Yes, and persuade students to choose jobs that match their field.

Hassan: Fair enough. Maybe it's not such a bad idea after all.

Ali: So... are you thinking of applying anywhere soon?

Hassan: Only if I can manage both. I'll speak to the career advisor first.

Ali: Good plan. Let's help each other shortlist some flexible options.

Hassan: Deal! Let's start this weekend.
